WISHES OF A DREAMER

Some say we're living in a golden age of action figures, when everything from Road Warrior to Reservoir Dogs to Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon is being made into toys. But it's not good enough for me.

You see, I'm that kinda jerk who'll win a million dollars and complain that the bills aren't crisp enough. I want it all, and until someone reads my mind (or this letter) and decides to make my personal list of action figure faves, this won't be my Golden Age. So get reading, you big ol' action-figure industry, you—and make me happy:

BLUE MAN GROUP: Seen the commercials for Pentium 4 with those blue-headed weirdos? They're the coolest cutting-edge rock 'n' rollers you'll ever see in an off-Broadway experience, and they deserve action figures. Even if they just made one Blue Man and I had to pretend there were three different ones, I'd be happy.

BIG TROUBLE IN LITTLE CHINA: Just got the DVD, and though I'd skip Kurt Russell acting like John Wayne and a younger and sexier Kim Cattrall, I'd kill a small mammal with my bare hands if someone would just give me Thunder, Lightning and Rain figures. Ooh, ooh, wait...or a Lo Pan with a light-up head!

2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY: Picture a Dave Bowman in a space suit figure with a Pod Bay playset, complete with Hal and a pod he can fit in! Awesome! Okay, I admit nobody would buy this except for me, but that's one confirmed sale, and that's gotta count for something.

BLOOM COUNTY: Any child of the '80s would kill for an action figure of a hung-over Steve Dallas in his underwear, cigarette in his mouth and fire extinguisher lazily in hand, ready to hose down anyone who dares to ring his doorbell. Hell, I'd settle for Opus with an ice cream cone. I'm easy.

That's my short and happy list. I await the industry's response, and until then I'm just the jerk down the hall.

FANFARE

GOOD STUFF, MAYNARD

Lately I've been getting mail from ToyFARE newbies demanding to know why that "Maynard McGuffin" guy gets so many of his letters printed, while their perfectly good letters fall by the wayside. As all good F.O.O.T. soldiers know, of course, Maynard McGuffin is the name we tack onto "FanFARE" letters when the writer didn't include one. This is not a badge of honor. This is a badge of shame, a scarlet letter "M," meant to tell the world you're the kind of dork who forgets to sign his or her name when corresponding with the outside world. So please, folks, take the time to include your name.

As a side note, the very first Maynard, Jesse Hanna of Redding, Calif., now signs all of his letters "The Original Maynard McGuffin." Some folks'll never learn.

Dear ToyFARE,

I don't know how they manage to get away with this, but Dragon Models out of China has been making 12-inch action figures with head sculptures that are strangely similar to real-life actors. There are pics at www.dragonmodels.com. About a year ago, they released a figure named Detective Chow, whose head sculpt bore a striking resemblance to Chow Yun Fat. They also announced a "Duel of Stalingrad" two-pack, where the figures, Misha and Major Kater, have a strange resemblance to the characters played by Ed Harris and Jude Law in Enemy at the Gates. Last but not least, the new Khe Sahn Marine from the Vietnam War, whose name is Russell, looks like...you guessed it, Russell Crowe.

The most blatant is from a company named Hot Toys. Their Famous Type figures are obviously Tom Cruise from Mission: Impossible 2 and George Lucas with R2-D2, and the pilots are Tom Cruise from Top Gun and Will Smith from Independence Day. I don't know how they do it, I don't know if they're breaking laws and I don't know if there's anything the actors can do about it. It doesn't seem like anyone cares if they get caught or not. But I've never heard anyone complain, especially the collectors. How do they get away with it?

Scott Klauder
Sharon Hill,

Hoo boy, what a legal minefield. Let it be known here and now that ToyFARE isn't accusing anybody of doing anything wrong, got it? Now on with our response....

Considering that China almost didn't give us our spy plane back a couple months ago, one gets the idea that getting into an intercontinental lawsuit with a Chinese company would be a thorny struggle, indeed. Generally speaking, copyrights in Asian countries aren't protected with the same vigor they are in the United States to begin with. And while some of the likenesses seem pretty spot-on, others are more likely "inspired" by an actor than a direct rip-off.

And it's possible that the production runs (in the case of "Duel of Stalingrad," 4,000 apiece) are too small to bother with, legally speaking. If you're Russell Crowe, you're probably too busy busting up marriages to worry about whether a Chinese toy company is using your likeness.

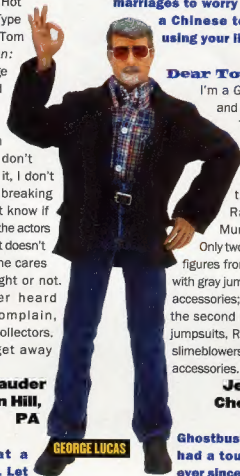

Dear ToyFARE,

I'm a Ghostbusters nut, and I think McFarlane Toys should make figures based on the movies (not the cartoons) with the likenesses of Ramis, Akroyd, Murray and Hudson.

Only two series, mind you: figures from the first movie, with gray jumpsuits and lots of accessories; and figures from the second movie, with blue jumpsuits. Ray and Winston's slimeblowers and...well, lots of accessories.

Jess Wendell
Cheyenne, WY

Ghostbusters fans have had a tough row to hoe ever since the first movie came out in 1984. First that god-awful Ghostbusters cartoon based on a completely different property came out, complete with figures nobody in their right mind would want (fat guy in aviator's cap—thanks). Then The Real Ghostbusters cartoon arrived, with the right characters but completely screwed-around character likenesses. Then the second Ghostbusters movie stunk up screens around the world.

Should someone make good Ghostbusters figures? Damn right...but since the third movie seems dead in the water, we'll probably never see them.

Dear Mr. Root,

I was DVD shopping one day and came across the Krull: Special Edition disc. In my opinion, this movie is a classic and obviously has a cult following. I was wondering if any toys were ever made for this movie and, if not, will any ever be made?

Buster Leonard
Waggoner, OK

This letter was just full of shocking moments. I'll list them:

- 1) They put Krull on DVD?
- 2) There's not just a DVD, there's a special edition?
- 3) Somebody bought this DVD?

And now, for the not-so-shocking moments:

- 1) There were never any Krull toys made.
- 2) There never will be.

FanFare.

Somewhere I read the following words from Halle Berry concerning her Storm action figure from the X-Men movie: "I feel vindicated now, because I was really upset that I didn't have an action figure (in The Flintstones). So now I do, and it feels good." That's great!

Today an action figure is not only a toy, it's a collector's item. As a real fan and collector, I bought the Storm action figure. Halle Berry deserves the release of an action figure series based on all the costume changes from the movie and, logically, a 12-inch figure.

Halle Berry is more than the traditional celebrity. She is a real and complete star. When you see her action figure or hear about her career, please also think about all the people and the new generation who try to make a difference. Halle Berry is the perfect model to understand the positive human nature. Keep every publication a testimony of excellence—discover a Storm action figure as a tribute to the real heroes (the good and gifted people who win over every adversity) and extol Halle Berry as the genuine

HOMEMADE HERO

CANTINA ALIENS

Ryan Cochran
Phoenix, AZ

Ryan Cochran isn't gonna just sit around waiting for his favorite Star Wars Cantina aliens to be made! No sir! Since there's little else to do when you live in a desert, Ryan got to work making the aliens Hasbro hasn't gotten around to yet. He didn't specify exactly what he used to make these folks, which is a big no-no in these parts, but his aliens were cool enough that we just couldn't resist showin' 'em off!

FASHION STARS Ryan gave new duds to (clockwise from the left) Feltpipern Trevagg, Unut Poll, Trinto Duaba, Myo & well-known ladykiller Hem Dazon.

Send your custom figure photos (no Polaroids!) to Homemade Heroes, c/o ToyFare, 151 Wells Ave., Congers, NY 10920! Be sure to tell us what you made your creation outta!

presence from the mentioned merits and the pure power of the soul.

Gerardo L. Berrios Ponce, Puerto Rico

Didn't Halle Berry also run somebody down with her car, then drive off? Er, allegedly?

Dear ToyFare,

Speaking for all the fans of the film Dark Crystal, we would like to thank you for the mention of Sideshow Toys' new Dark Crystal figures.

We DO NOT refer to ourselves as "Crystalheads," because, like you stated in the magazine, "so are users of crystal meth." The film was going to feature different languages—not Greek or Egyptian, but a language based on the two, created by linguist Alan Garner. They were not going to feature subtitles. The correct spelling for "Skeksis" is "Skeksis"; "Urskaks" is "urSkeks"; and "urZah" is spelled "urZah." They are not sure if the Mystic figure will be urZah or urSu.

Maynard McGuffin
AudryDahmr@aol.com

I consider myself duly educated. Now I'm going to do my best to forget this information as quickly as possible.

Dear ToyFare,

Why are y'all so obsessed with that Lupin guy? He's showing up all over the price guide in "Big Shots," "Mug Shots," etc. I've never seen him before in my life. What's the deal?

George Timban
Royal Palm, FL

That's Lupin III, the world's greatest thief, star of 30-plus years' worth of TV and movie animation, comic books and video games. Since he's a Japanese creation, you probably haven't seen much of him in Royal Palm. But I heartily recommend picking up 1979's Castle of Cagliostro movie on VHS or DVD wherever anime is sold. It's about time you found out what you're missing.

Dear Tom,

Is Pokémon dead yet?

Paul Weiss
Portland, ME

It's getting there, Paul.... It's getting there.

Dear ToyFare,

Since the new mega-super-duper-poseable Spider-Man is clearly the greatest toy ever made in the history of the world, shouldn't it get some sort of special lifetime achievement award from you guys?

Jay Tate
Cedar Rapids, IA

Only a handful of months left until our annual "Best of the Best" feature, Jay. Judging by the reaction of the ToyFare staff, I have a sneaky suspicion of Web-head will be making an appearance somewhere within.

LET'S SEE YOUR AURRA SING DO THIS!

Dear ToyFare,

ALPHA

ZACH'S BACKYARD

Every month, one letter will be answered by Zach Malamute, official Toyfare spokesdog and America's favorite Malamute six years running!

Dear ToyFare,

Every time you waste space on pretending you're letting that dog answer a letter in your magazine, it makes you clowns look that much dumber. The other toy magazines don't let dogs answer letters. Maybe there's a reason for that, morons!

Jimmy Vargas
Boise, ID

Zach sad. Zach make sad eyes and lay down. Sad sad sad. You no love Zach? Zach make sad eyes. Sad sad sad. Rub Zach's tummy? Nobody rub Zach's tummy.

is dead at age 49. I find this news unbelievably sad.

Any chance of Hitchhiker's toys in the near future? Cuddling a Zaphod Beeblebrox would make me feel a whole lot better right now.

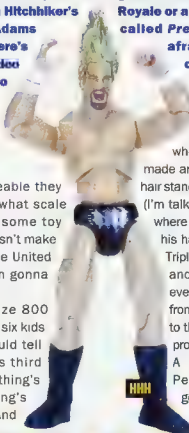

John David
Minneapolis, MN

No toy plans just yet, but don't panic—Disney's working on a Hitchhiker's feature film (which Adams was scripting), and there's a new 3D interactive video game in the pipeline, so it's possible either release could spawn some playthings.

Dear ToyFare,

I don't care how poseable they are and I don't care what scale they come in, but if some toy company out there doesn't make action figures of all the United States Presidents, I'm gonna be hella pissed.

Kids can memorize 800 Pokémon but probably six kids in all of existence could tell you who our nation's third President was. Something's wrong here. Something's wrong with America. And President toys could be the cure.

Samuel Jordan
Midland, TX

Several presidents have made an appearance in Hasbro's 12-inch collector lines, including John F. Kennedy, Teddy Roosevelt and George Washington. But until there's a video game called U.S. President Battle Royale or a Saturday morning cartoon called Presidential Funhouse, I'm afraid politicians just don't carry enough "pop" with kids to warrant a toy line.

Dear ToyFare,

What do you think Triple-H did when he saw that JAKKS Pacific made an action figure of him with his hair standing straight up like a jackass? (I'm talking about the "realistic" pose where he's applying the Pedigree and his hair's all aflutter). I'm guessing Triple-H kicked in JAKKS' front door and started giving Pedigrees to everyone he could lay hands on, from the secretary at the front desk to the guys in the mailroom to the product managers to the president. A hundred and fifty-seven Pedigrees later, he got back in his car, drove home and ate Stephanie's homemade tuna casserole.

Think I'm close?

Marcus Johns
Point Pleasant, WV

Do you think Stephanie crumbles up crackers on top? Because it's good that way.

Dear FanFare,

What is up with that Drew Barrymore Charlie's Angels doll? It looks like she just put her head in a light socket. And the clothes look like they just came from the cheapest thrift store there is.

I plan to buy the Cameron Diaz and Lucy Liu dolls because they are hot, and I plan to marry both of those actresses. But Tom Green can have my Drew Barrymore.

Phillip Colbert
Edmonston, MD

I'm confused. Wanting to marry Cameron Diaz and Lucy Liu (at the same time, no less) makes you a man. But buying Cameron Diaz and Lucy Liu fashion dolls makes you a wee girl. So which are you?

While Phillip ponders that question, I'm gonna make my big escape. See ya next month, kids.

Star Trek Returns

The original empire is coming back to the toy aisles

What happened to the Star Trek figures?

It's been two years since Playmates shipped its last batches of Seven of Nines and Kirks; two long, agonizing years for fans to wonder how a franchise that once ruled the roost could have vanished as suddenly as William Shatner's hairline. But break out the hairpiece, fly-boy, 'cause Star Trek toys are coming back!

With a new prequel series, Enterprise, slated for the fall and Star Trek X set to hit theaters in 2002, license-holder Viacom is preparing a major re-launch of Star Trek toys for next year. But to whet fans' whistles in the interim, they've tapped Palisades Marketing to produce special, limited-edition figures specifically for Star Trek's 35-year anniversary.

As if the prospect of shiny new Trek figures from the folks responsible for fan favorites Buffy and Final Fantasy weren't enough, hardcore Trekkies should be frothing at the mouth to learn the company's inaugural offering will be a limited-edition two-pack featuring classic Captain Kirk and Trek creator Gene Roddenberry!

"We were getting calls from fans, retailers and Star Trek experts saying 'we want to celebrate the 35th anniversary; you guys can't miss this,'" said Nancy Bassett, vice president of worldwide licensing for Viacom, the consumer product licensing department of Paramount Pictures. "So we decided to do something to celebrate it in a very significant way." Bassett said that Trekkies are completely jazzed about the idea. "They see it as a great tribute to the 'godfather' of Star Trek. He's never been done before."

DEVIL'S IN THE DETAILS

Although Palisades is still in the process of designing the new "6-inch range" figures, company President Mike Hom promises they'll Gene Roddenwho?

In most of the photos we've seen, he looks like just another old guy in a sweater. So how in the name of all that's holy is Gene Roddenberry getting himself an action figure along with Kirk?

He created the most venerable sci-fi franchise in history, that's how. And you can bet hardcore toy geeks across America will be slap-fighting over these babbles when they hit store shelves later this year.

Interestingly, there was more to the "Great Bird of the Galaxy" than his godhood status among dateless high schoolers. Depending on who you ask, Roddenberry was either a womanizing boozehound or a brave ex-cop war hero—all qualities we can respect.

During WW2 he flew dangerous bombing missions over the South Pacific, eventually earning himself a Distinguished Flying Cross.

In 1947, while traveling on a Pan Am flight, he narrowly survived a crash in the Syrian desert that killed most of the plane's crew and seven passengers. He even managed to pull a wounded Arab dignitary from the wreckage.

And while fantasizing Trekkies drool over the prospect of rubbing up against Lt. Uhura in the turbo lift, this guy actually scored with Nichelle Nichols. That alone gives him our thumbs up... and gives us a great idea for another two-pack. ■ JB blow the doors off any Trek toys we've seen before.

Kirk will be seated in his original captain's chair, meticulously modeled from actual design blueprints provided by Paramount, which will be mounted on its own section of bridge deck plate. When he's not in his swanky seat of power, Kirk will feature extensive articulation, including a ball-jointed neck and shoulders, double-jointed knees and specially designed hips. Accessories will include a phaser and communicator.

Roddenberry, fashioned to resemble his middle-aged 1960s self, will be standing to one side of the Enterprise skipper, with a hand on the command chair. His clothing will be a V-neck sweater, button-down shirt and slacks, a look discussed by Viacom with Roddenberry's wife Majel (Star Trek's Christine Chapel). The pilot script of Star Trek, made of real paper, has been discussed as a possible accessory. But will he be able to bust a move?

"He'll have at least the standard six to eight points of articulation," explained Palisades' director of product development, Ken Lilly, "but whether he'll have the funky hip joints and that kind of stuff, I don't know. Kirk is the one you want to play with; Roddenberry is the one you want to keep on your desk."

The set is tentatively scheduled to hit stores in early November and will be limited to between 35,000 and 50,000 pieces. It's expected to retail for under $20.

LOST IN SPACE

Between 1992 and 1999, Playmates was Star Trek. It kept collectors grinning for eight years with hundreds of action figures, playsets and other accessories drawn from characters and situations in all the Trek series, as well as several of the movies. Mainstream buyers and rabid collectors alike ate up almost everything Playmates had to offer, and then...it was over.

So what happened?

According to Bassett, it was her company's decision to put the toys on hiatus after their Star Trek licensing agreement with Playmates expired in 1999. It's part of an "overall strategy," she explained, to stimulate consumer demand and reinvigorate interest for a huge re-launch of Trek toys planned for next year, to coincide with the release of Star Trek X and the second-season kick-off of Enterprise.

Although the show's producers are being typically tight-lipped about the details of their latest foray into the final frontier, what we do know is Enterprise takes place 100 years before the original series and features a multicultural crew, including a Vulcan First Officer named T'Pol. In a controversial casting decision, the ship's captain, Jonathan Archer, will be played by former Quantum Leap star Scott Bakula.

THE NEXT GENERATION

While Palisades sees the Kirk-Roddenberry two-pack as its Star Trek "audition," there are several major toy manufacturers and some smaller ones reportedly busting for a chance to create the first Archer, T'Pol and Dr. Phlox figures or bring us a new Trek X Picard. The license is rumored to cost big bucks and Paramount is keeping mum about who is in the running for it. It could be Palisades, it could be Playmates...it could be anybody.

"Hopefully," Bassett said, "we'll make a major announcement in the fall." ■ James Baxter

BRIEFS TINY TOY NEWS JUST FOR YOU

JOIN IN THE WHOPPER RINGS

Get ready to eat those Whoppers: Burger King has announced that they have snagged the fast-food tie-in promotion for this winter's Lord of the Rings flick. The company is mum as to whether the promotion will include figures and/or glassware.

MONUMENT MAN: A British

company has released a doll called Invisible Jim, which comes complete with blister card—and nothing else. The packaging states: "Invisible Jim. As not seen on TV. Warning: Small parts may ruin your sex life. A gripping hand would be nice."

DO YOU WANT TO BRING HOME YOUR WHIMMY

Returns figures, you may have looked at the back of the 3-card and saw missing toys: Anubis Warrior w/ O'Donnell and Rick w/ Piggy Mummy. The figures were scrapped but may come out in Wave 2 this fall.

THE GOONIES

While Deuce Bigalow goes direct to VHS and DVD simultaneously, the world has to wait for the digital gods to get around to the truly great movies of our time. Everything's alright now, though, because The Goonies DVD is coming out this month, complete with commentary from the film's stars. But to make this world a true garden of paradise, we offer up a two-packed toy line.

MIKEY AND BRAND

The Walsh brothers, Michael and Brandon, would come with The Map and the medallion that showed them and the rest of the Goonies the way to the "rich stuff," some of which would come in Mikey's marble bag. Mikey's arm would move for Inhaler-us'n' action, and Brand would ride a small girl's bicycle.

DATA AND ANDY

The brainy inventor of the group, Data's figure would have fully functional "slick shoes," which would dispense an oily, non-toxic lubricant, and a giant boxing glove would pop out from his coat. And dare we add...Pincers of Power? Andy would come with Troy's sweater (removable) and her own copy of The Map's life-saving sheet music.

MOUTH AND STEF

For the two talkers of the group, voice chips are de rigueur. Corey Feldman's "Mouth" would say (in a tough-guy voice), "Hey, Mikey! Gotta go to the bathroom?" Martha Plimpton's "Stef" would say, "My glasses! You broke my glasses!" and, "I feel like I'm babysitting, except I'm not getting paid."

CHUNK AND SLOTH

Chunk's accessories would all be food items (pizza, Chocolate Eruption ice cream, etc.), and a vibrating Truffle Shuffle action feature! Sloth would come with broken shackles, a Baby Ruth bar and a Superman T-shirt. (Check out AndGor.com's version of Sloth at right!) A "Hey you guys!" sound chip would be cool, too.

PIRATE SHIP PLAYSET

This gigantic playset would come complete with the ship, tons of jewels and, of course, One-Eyed Willie. ■ ZACH OAT

NFL, NHL onboard with McFarlane

It was just a matter of time.

Four months after the demise of Hasbro's Starting Lineup, McFarlane Toys has swooped in and snagged the rights to emboss official team logos and colors on its new NFL figures and its next wave of NHL hockey heroes. And riding on the big news, the Ayatollah of action figures has also leaked news that sculptors are busy at work on a toy of the biggest sports hero of 2001.

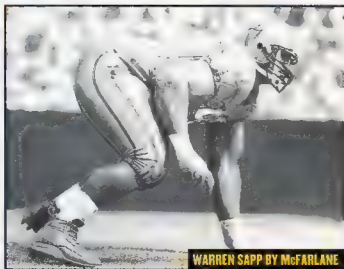

With the Dallas lone star and the Indy horseshoe joining authentic mud stains and chunks of grass, McFarlane's 6-inch figures are sure to throw a head slap at a whole new tailgate-party fan base that never thought of going into a toy store before.

The first series, due in August, will feature Emmitt Smith, Edgerrin James, Randy Moss, Kurt Warner, Warren Sapp and Eddie George. A second series, slated for November, will include Marshall Faulk, Wayne Chrebet, Daunte Culpepper, Mark Brunell, Marvin Harrison and Brian Urlacher.

On the NHL front, Wave 3, due in the fall and featuring Martin Brodeur, Jose Theodore, Peter Forsberg, John LeClair, Mats Sundin and Ed Belfour, will all come with official logos.

But perhaps the most exciting news is what's going on with Wave 4. The Christmas-slated line is said to include a certain NHL great who came out of retirement this year to lead his team to the playoffs. Hmmm. ■ BJ WIP TIME Playmates Toys will be making figures based on The Ripping Friends, a cartoon by Ren and Stimpy creator John Kricfalusi debuting this fall on Fox. The first swish of four figures will include manly adventurers Craig, Rip, Stab and Chunk, all with voice chips spouting lines from the show.

GET THE MARSHMALLOWS Three million dollars worth of toys went up in flames last month. The Little Tikes warehouse in Ohio burned down in early June, taking with it playground equipment, picnic tables and Christmas. Merry, kids.

SHREK RETURNS Dreamworks has announced that a sequel to Shrek is set to start production. But, it's possible McFarlane may not be doing the toys. According to the company, Hasbro has first right of refusal on the toys, and judging from the movie, they may like this time.

Eternia Again

Revamped He-Man toys to debut in 2002

He-Man, the master of so many of our universes in the '80s, is back. This month, Mattel will unveil designs for an updated He-Man line at the San Diego Comiccon in sunny California.

"It's going to be a more contemporary He-Man," Mattel spokesperson Sara Rosales told ToyFARE. "You can't really make him look like today—he's a guy in a loincloth. But it will be a more contemporary sculpt."

The new He-Man line, which is being created by Mattel's internal designers and sculpting house the Four Horseman (who will be on-site at Comiccon for the unveiling), will be part of the celebration of He-Man's 20th anniversary in the spring, 2002.

To quench your immediate He-Man thirst, Mattel also will use the con to unveil the second wave of re-issues: Battle Armor He-Man, Battle Armor Skeletor, Stratos, Zodac, Buzz-off and Clawful, along with the Man-Beast assortment of He-Man with BattleCat and Skeletor with Panthor. The new wave, which follows this spring's completely sold-out first wave, is scheduled to ship in the fall. Mattel also will be selling extremely limited (a couple hundred) two-up figures of He-Man from its booth in San Diego. ■ BJ

WHAT THE FRACK? He-Man gets an update.

A HE-MAN COMIC?

Toys may not be the only piece of nostalgia coming in on this '80s wave.

Val Staples, the man behind 400,000-hits-a-month Website HeMan.org, told ToyFARE that he has been in a series of what he calls high-level, "one-on-one" meetings with Mattel concerning the possibility of producing a He-Man comic book series.

"We have a lot of large-name talent behind it," Staples said. "I was trying to get Straczynski (who got his TV start writing for the original He-Man series) to write it, but Larry DeTillio is going to do it. He wrote on the cartoon when it was first around. He knows the story and he knows the characters."

Staples said that fans who flock to his site are looking for a balance of the old and the new with the He-Man relaunch. "The hardcore fans want to see more detail and better scripts," he said. "But a lot of fans are anti-McFarlane. They want something their kids could play with."

If a comic is done, they would like to see a "a more serious, adult story."

Mattel spokesperson Sara Rosales said that the company is exploring all He-Man entertainment options. "Whether it's a comic book, movies, DVD or TV special," said Rosales, "there will be some sort of media presence in conjunction with the anniversary." ■ BJ

TOY OF THE MONTH SAMURAI SPAWN

WHO: Japan, 1185. Brash Bushi Warrior Takeda angers the feudal lords so much that they have him assassinated. With his last breath came a cry for vengeance. Thus, Samurai Spawn was born out of the pits of darkness, "hunting Samurai warriors who are not pure of heart and searching the land for his own salvation." Heavy.

WHAT: Samurai Spawn, part of McFarlane's Dark Ages Series. The Samurai Wars line available everywhere.

WHY: You can't keep a bad-ass man down—or a bad-ass company. When Todd McFarlane revolutionized the toy industry in the mid-'90s, every fan boy and fantasy freak was drooling over the attention in detail. Then came the backlash: Where's the articulation? Well, McFarlane is lashing back with Samurai Spawn. Over 15 points of articulation, including multi-directional ball-jointed neck, shoulder, waist and hips; real fur on his chin; shoulder and knee pads; braided beard that hangs down to his waist and Gene Simmons-esque dragon hook make this toy one of McFarlane's best ever. ■ BJ

The Body Shop

Dr. Mego delivers a new supply of Mego bods. Customizers rejoice!

Paul Clarke, a.k.a. Dr. Mego, had a dream: to see Mego-esque figures once again produced in quantity for customizing fans.

But his repro business could only handle so much. Where could he turn? Answer: China.

With the help of a manufacturing partner, Clarke's ship has literally come in, and he now offers a wide range of manufactured goods through his Website, drmegocom. Available in large quantities are a Mego-style Type 2 body, a male head with both black and blonde hair, capes, shorts, boots and bodysuits in a variety of colors.

The bodies will be available for sale July 15, said Clarke, exclusively through drmegocom—for now. "Hopefully retailers will be interested in carrying them," he said. With an initial retail price of only $15 a pop, customizers—or collectors with a loose-legged Duke boy—will be after these like mice after cheese.

And, thanks to manufacturing innovations, the bodies are better than ever. "The hands are more flexible than the originals," said Clarke. "The feet will never crack. The knee joint is one solid piece, instead of a pin and socket, so that will never break."

Will we see more Mego in the future? "I would love to be able to offer the female body with a few modifications to improve the design," said Clarke, "but that decision will be based solely on sales. Manufacturing is not cheap."

Clarke will also produce his own characters through 7th St. Toys, a company he's setting up on the Web to sell his own Planet Gods line, as well as legendary heroes like Robin Hood, using his new repro body and other repro accessories. ■ Zach Oat

A new Robotech invasion

Did we mention that Robotech is back?

Toynami has put together a smokin' line of action figures, each with 15 points of articulation, that will be on sale later this year. The 5-figure series includes three VF-1Js, belonging to Rick Hunter, Max Sterling and Miria, as well as Ben Dixon's VF-1A and Skull Leader's VF-1S, and should hit around the holidays.

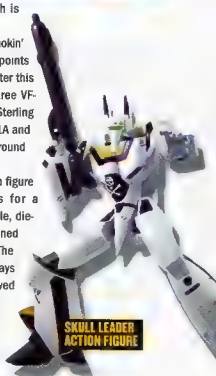

In addition to the standard action figure series, Toynami also has plans for a Masterpiece series, with transformable, die-cast versions of the five aforementioned fighters and sold book-styled cases. The "volumes" will come out every 60 days starting in November, possibly followed by booster armor packs for all the ships.

The series won't stop at Macross, either! Look for New Generation merchandise in the months ahead, starting with a superdeformed

Alpha fighter line near the end of the year.

Add a brand-spanking-new DVD transfer of the original series of the adventures of Rick, Minmei and the rest of the crew, and it's officially a comeback: Volumes 1 and 2 hit the stores last month with six whole episodes each, titled Robotech—First Contact and Robotech—Transformation, respectively. But if you've got the dough, just buy the Robotech—Macross Saga Boxed Set Vol. 1, which includes a bonus disc with a character model gallery, Robotech International—a showcase of Robotech from foreign lands and a 90-minute premiere documentary on the Robotech phenomenon. ■ Z

BIONICLE

BY: LEGO

RELEASE DATE: Summer

It's a homegrown action figure franchise from the folks at LEGO! Bionicle is the story of the island of Matoran and the Toa champions (both shown in the pictures) who're summoned by villagers to defend them from the evil Makuta. [There's more info in this month's "Appetite for Construction" feature on page 46.] Each figure's approximately 6 inches tall, and brother, are they over articulated!

POHATU

GROUNDW Onua is the Earth Spirit, meaning he's most comfortable underground, digging tunnels and such. Above ground, his eyesight sucks.

SAB SEER The great spirit Mata Nui, for whom the villagers' island is named, was put into a deep sleep by his evil brother Makuta!

STONE GUMP Pohatu is the Stone Spirit. He's hella strong, can move mountains around and make rocks explode like bombs!

CALI

WET AND WILD The Water Spirit, Cali, is the only female Toa. She's smarter than the other five Toa put together—at least, she thinks she is. Women!

MAKUTA MATANA The evil split of the island, Makuta, can take many different forms while screwing over the villagers!

LEWA

BIONICLE BEAT At lego.com you can download music inspired by Bionicle, or mix your own tunes!

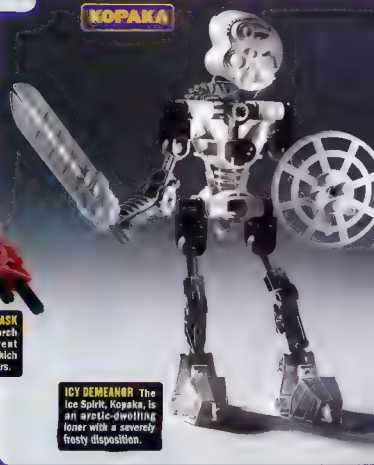

AIR AMERICA Lewa is the Air Spirit, sticking to the treetops, where he glides from branch to branch. He's also the youngest Toa.

TAHU

MEN BEHIND THE MASK Each Toa must search out several different Masks of Kanohi, which give them new powers.

LAVA LAMP The oldest of the Toa, Tahu is the Fire Spirit. He's perfectly at home hangin' in volcanoes.

YEAR of the DRAGON

Loose at last.
Digger and the Inmates at Art
Asylum Yank
TOYFARE Through
the Hatching of Crouching Tiger.
Hidden Dragon

by BILL JENSEN

BIDDING TO CHINA Meet Art Asylum President Digger, and his newest pride and joy.

When you break out on your own, when you've left yer momma and given a finger to yer dad, you want to make an impact. You want to stake your claim and kick the world's ass, if just to someday hit that class reunion and say, "Screw you. I am the champion."

Art Asylum is getting ready to kick that ass.

No longer simply a sculpting and designing house that's provided action figure designs for companies like Toy Biz for years, the Asylum—masterminds behind *Silent Screamer*s, Space Ghost Coast to Coast and Chaos Dark Alliance!—is now a full-service, A-to-Z, concept-to-J-Card toymaker like McFarlane, Hasbro or Mattel.

For its coming-out party, Art Asylum already had the most controversial license of the year, garnering worldwide media attention with its Eminem figures. But two weeks before the International Toy Fair (not the magazine, the show), Art Asylum snagged the rights to make figures based on characters from the awe-inspiring Chinese epic Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon. The story of how these figures got made isn't different from most, but the speed and energy that went into the process is trademark Art Asylum.

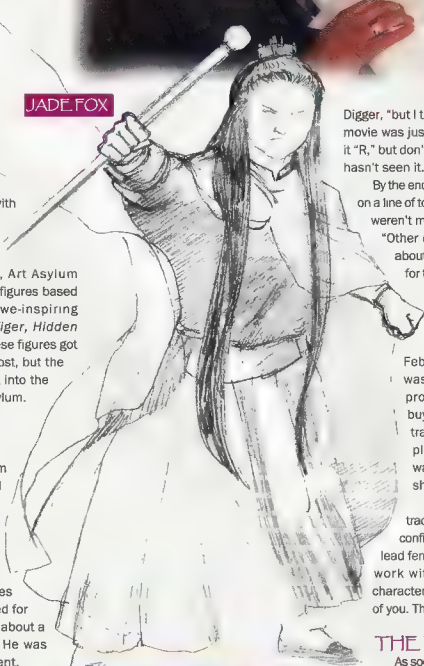

SEEING THE CHINA SHOP

As soon as Art Asylum President Digger (his real name a closely guarded secret) saw the movie, he immediately saw the potential for action figures. The mix of bad ass fighting females, martial arts males and ancient myth just clicked for him. But he wasn't thinking about a boring line of collectibles. He was envisioning a major toy event.

"Everybody's conditioned to think that this kind of toy needs to be static for adults," explains

JADE FOX

A SWORD BY ITSELF IS NOTHING Nelson Asencio (top) designed the majority of the line, including this sketch of an unproduced Jade Fox.

Digger, "but I think it has kid potential. The movie was just like the Matrix: They rated it "R," but don't tell me every kid in America hasn't seen it."

By the end of 2000, Digger pitched Sony on a line of toys with true playability. "There weren't many competitors," he recalls.

"Other companies weren't thinking about this incredible, eclectic film for toys. But there was no T and A or vulgarity, and it's got some insane fighting in it."

Digger was awarded the license so close to February's Toy Fair that there wasn't even time to mock up prototypes to show potential buyers. He remixed the film's trailer into a toy ad, and buyers pledged support. The game was on. Art Asylum promised shipment by September.

"We're going against every tradition," Digger announced with confidence. "It's a movie with three lead female characters—that doesn't work with boy's toys. But they're characters that could kick the s— out of you. That's why I'm not afraid."

THE PLAN BEGINS

As soon as Toy Fair was over, Digger appointed one of his head artists and idea men, Nelson Asencio, to spearhead the project. Asencio spent a grueling week studying Medieval China, watching the movie close to 50 times on the all-regions DVD player at the Asylum studio in Brooklyn, N.Y. He studied the movements, clothing patterns and materials and thought up bases for the figures to stand on. He created files for each character that would be the bibles the other artists and designers would live by.

Armed with Asencio's ideas, three initial options for Crouching Tiger toys began to take shape:

1. Figures with flying rigs on their backs
2. Figures with a lot of kicking and punching action

3. Figures with very elaborate bases

"We needed to get these into mass market," remembers Digger, who had to balance his artistic instincts with boardroom bean-counting. He was learning that trying to appease both collectors and kids can stress out even the most hardened of toy presidents. "I'm plagued with the fact that I know the collectors want more."

Forced to shelve the flying-rig idea as well as magnetic feet to simulate the wall-crawling effect from the movie due to time and cost—though they might show up in future waves—the kicking and punching action got scrapped for good.

"You'd have to enlarge the body to put mechanisms in," Digger explained. "That would make them look bad, especially with the women."

Highly articulated figures with elaborate bases were given the green light. "I think building a scene with the characters is really where it's at," says Digger.

NARROWING THE LINE

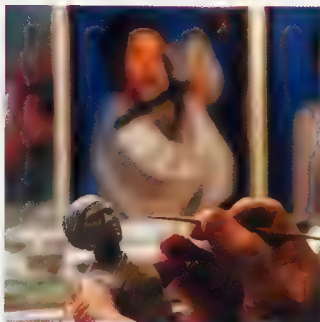

The original plan called for six figures, but in order to get the toys into stores quick enough so that the movie was still fresh in people's minds, Tree Outfit Jen Yu and Jade Fox had to get the axe. Wave 1 was decided to be Li Mu Bai, Yu Shu Lien, Jen Yu and Lo (see page 22 for a full description of each toy), and the others were put on hold.

"The hardest one to choose was Jen Yu in the thief outfit," says Asencio. While fans will want to re-create the final sword battle in the sky, Jen Yu in her ninja-like outfit was thought to be "the most action-oriented figure of the two," says Asencio. "And it's an action line."

The Asylum also has some tricks up their insinac sleeves to keep collectors on their toes, and Digger assures that variants will be more common than fish heads in Asian seafood.

"I'm not going to be advertising it," he revealed, "but we're doing variants. Not to push sales, but to be different. There will be five or six Jens, or maybe 300."

YU SHU LIEN

NO DESIRE WITHOUT RESTRAINT Action designs for Yu Shu Lien, including magnetic hands and feet, and sword-wielding Jen were scrapped early on.

Some changes won't be planned, since Digger can alter things even at the factory (like the time he decided to write "Go F— Your Mother" in Chinese characters on one of Lucifer's decapitated heads from the Chaos! Dark Alliance line), but all versions will be representative of the film.

"There will be no clear Li Mu Bai," cause he doesn't turn invisible in the film," Digger explains. "There will be no blood-splattered Yu Shu Lien, cause he doesn't get bloody in the movie."

MISSION: CONTROL ART

By the end of February, all of the initial meetings were complete. Conceptual art designs were drawn up by Asylum Head Artist Caesar and Asencio. With Sony's go-ahead, Caesar went to work on "control art," or drawing the characters in the poses that the figures will take shape in.

"I was starting to get a little scared," Digger remembered. At the time, he was receiving faxes of the art all the way in Hong Kong during a trip to lock-in a toy factory's schedule in China. "Asencio was creating incredibly complicated, super-articulated stuff. I'm into that, but they would have cost 35 bucks each! But the thing I was afraid of the most was time."

In another room of the Asylum, artist Djordje Djokovic was simultaneously working on packaging designs—which will also feature a small plastic coin. "You can either throw it out or save it, but we're not telling you what they're there for yet," says Digger with an evil laugh. He does hint, however, that the coins may become part of a contest to win original prototypes of the figures from the studio.

LOCKED IN

A peek at past-pursued
Art Asylum projects

SHRIMP IN THE BOX After grabbing the license to 40 Slim Shady figures, Art Asylum put him in the box. "We all loved it," says Digger of his elemental musical jack-in-the-box. "It was aggressive and it sounded awesome." The product is shelved, for now, so the Asylum can concentrate on the rest of the action figures.

SHRIMP IN THE BOX Digger and Brock at Art Asylum's development days (a year-and-a-half ago). People were tramping over each other to get the rights to the new Lord of the Rings movies. Toys came to the Asylum, which made two dramatic displays that looked together, featuring a figure of Frodo Baggins to New Line. Digger supplied Playmates with a giant, 34-by-54-inch scroll printed on antiqued paper that detailed what the line would look like. "I hoped the presentation would go well," says Digger. The morning ultimately went to Toy Biz.

IRON MAIDEN Toy Biz was a die-hard Maiden fan, says Digger. "I wanted to do a whole line based on album covers: Eddie, Power Slave, Eddie Number of the Beast." An 18-inch Eddie may still come out, but the inch line is dead, thanks to McFarlane's Maiden one-shot. At Digger is happy the little version is in good hands. "If it's not us doing it, it should be McFarlane."

GRINCH 'N THE SNOW (Bottom right) Universal and Art Asylum were in negotiations to do a Grinch in the box. But, Digger says, they wanted a toned-down Grinch, sort of mix of the cartoon version and the Jim Carrey version. "It just wasn't worth it," says Digger. BJ

TOMORROW...I'LL KICK OVER WUDAN MOUNTAIN The inmates gather to view the finished product...and plot a course for the future.

FOREIGN ARTICULATION

After only a week, the control art is finished and in the hands of Lead Mold Technician Adam Capparelli, who will turn the blueprints into the first 3D version of the toy. An important step, that first figure will work out exactly how each point of articulation is performed.

"We're very influenced by Kaiyodo," says Digger of the renowned Japanese action figure company. "All of our articulation was definitely influenced by them: the waist cuts, which are at angles and more dynamic; ball-jointed shoulders; a swivel cut in the bicep and an elbow joint with a sleeve, so you don't even have to look at the joint. People are going to look at them right away and not even think they move the way they do."

Sets for each character are fabricated out of various materials (acrylic, resin, etc.), and one set goes to the sculptors. This is one of the stages where the artistry craftsman can really shine. It's up to the sculptors to make the figures look like the people in the movie.

The actors didn't have likeness approval (as they often do, depending on the contract), but the Asylum guys are perfectionists—they made sure to get the faces just right. Sculpting bad-ass Paul Komoda, who does a majority of the Asylum likenesses, finished most of star Li Mu Bai himself.

After much squinting and fine-tuning of little details, the sculpts were ready to be sent to Sony for approval in April. "They flipped out," says Digger. "The reactions were really good."

Final go-ahead for production was given, and Art Asylum could breathe a contented sigh of satisfaction.

AND BEYOND...

Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon is in the past for the guys in Brooklyn. With all of the sculpting and designing finished, it's only up to Digger to make sure the manufacturing goes as planned overseas.

If all goes well, and it usually does, figures will hit in September with the Art Asylum logo proudly on the package. "This is just the beginning," says Digger, excited that his company has evolved to this new level. "We're gonna blow people's minds away, bro."

TOYFARE Managing Editor Bill Jensen has a black belt in the ancient art of hairstyling.

APPETITE FOR CONSTRUCTION

Six new LEGO lines we wanna see!

Let's go, LEGO!

There's nothing we like more than big, strapping action heroes made into cute little plastic figures. Medicom's imported Kubrick line is suddenly rocketing in popularity, with properties ranging from The Blair Witch Project to Planet of the Apes. But it's time for the crew that started it all to enter the collector's market full steam ahead. It's time for a LEGO explosion.

The Danish brick warriors scored big points with its Star Wars lines, and its Jurassic Park III and Harry Potter sets should tickle collectors. But that's not enough...at least for us!

Here's our vision of the toys LEGO should be making!

By Tom Root
LEGOs built by Robert Martin

THE MATRIX

The License: The cutting-edge science-fiction thrill ride that was The Matrix inspired a gaggle of figures from N2 Toys, but they just weren't enough! Fans will snap up anything in tight black leather, making Matrix LEGOs a sure hit.

The LEGOs: For starters, you've gotta have Neo, his mentor Morpheus and the evil Agent Smith. And since every popular character needs at least one toy variant, we want a Naked Neo in a Pod...er, y'know, for the ladies.

The Lowdown: Jay Bruns, LEGO's global marketing manager, responds thusly: "Now that's interesting. If only we could have the LEGO mini-figures hover above ground in super-slow motion."

THE ONE LEGO Matrix figures need to be a reality.

G.I. JOE: A REAL AMERICAN HERO

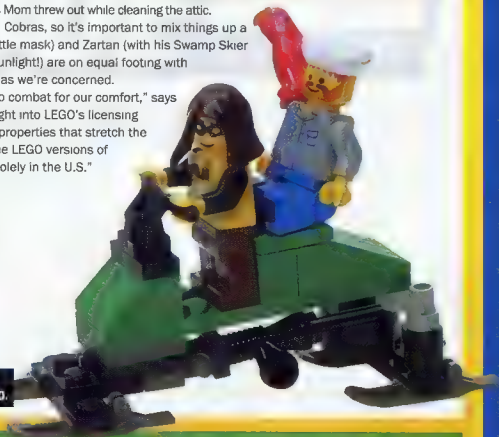

The License: Yo Joe! While G.I. Joe's 1980s reincarnation hit its peak in, well, the '80s, it never really went away. Those kids who played with Duke, Snake Eyes and Storm Shadow are all grown up and paying top dollar for the Joes Mom threw out while cleaning the attic.

The LEGOs: There were endless Joes and Cobras, so it's important to mix things up a bit. Icons like Cobra Commander (in his battle mask) and Zartan (with his Swamp Skier and, naturally, skin that changes color in sunlight!) are on equal footing with annoying characters like Shipwreck, as far as we're concerned.

The Lowdown: "Joe is a little too close to combat for our comfort," says Bruns, who offers a little more general insight into LEGO's licensing philosophy: "You probably will not see any properties that stretch the boundaries of violence. You also will not see LEGO versions of licensed properties whose base is rooted solely in the U.S."

WHEN PIGS FLY Even though there were parachutes, Joe may be a little violent for LEGO.

SUPERHEROES

The License: At this point, there've been action figures of just about every superhero under the sun—which is a good indication people would keep right on buyin' 'em in LEGO form! We're dreaming of a Mego-type line that incorporates heroes from all different comic book companies.

The LEGOs: We'll start with Marvel Comics' two most popular stars, Spider-Man and Wolverine. From DC Comics, you gotta go with Batman, especially in a LEGO world where you can build his Bat-gadgets—like the Batmobile!

The Lowdown: "Wouldn't it be cool if we could fit a web-slinger on our standard mini-figure?" Bruns muses. "Or build the Batcave out of LEGO bricks?"

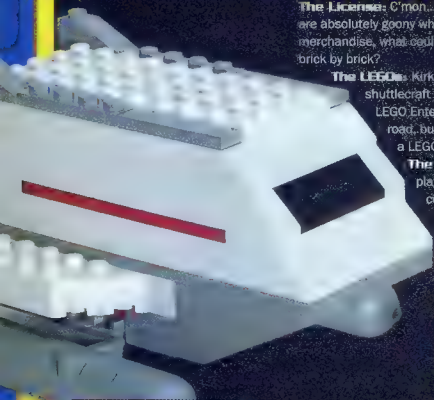

HOLY PLASTIC BUILDING BLOCKS! Superheroes like Batman, Spider-Man and Wolverine hold a world of LEGO possibilities.

STAR TREK (Classic)

The License: C'mon... Here's a natural if we ever heard one! Star Trek fans are absolutely goony when it comes to merchandise. And when it comes to merchandise, what could be better than building your own Star Trek universe brick by brick?

The LEGOs: Kirk and Spock are must-haves, of course. And a shuttlecraft would be a good warm-up before actually building a LEGO Enterprise. There'll be plenty of time for Klingons down the road, but the first villain we want is the Gorn, baby! And maybe a LEGO boulder to drop on its head.

The Lowdown: "Although it would make for cool LEGO play, Star Trek is a tough property for us, as we continue to concentrate on our long-term relationship with Lucasfilm on the LEGO Star Wars line," Bruns says.

HIGHLY LOGICAL Star Trek and LEGO would be a match made in the nexus.

LEGO builds an action figure line

LEGO isn't simply coasting on the success of Star Wars and the upcoming Harry Potter—they've produced a fantasy line all their own!

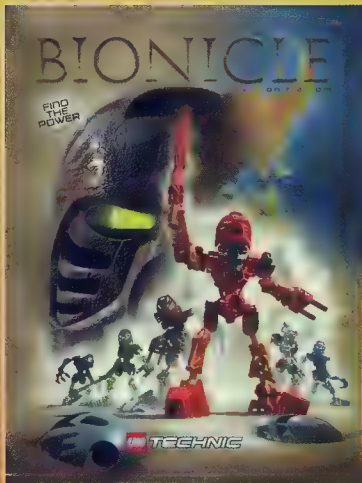

On the island paradise of Matanui, an evil force called the Makuta has created an atmosphere of darkness and decay. An island legend claims that six mighty heroes will restore peace to the island, but only if the villagers can find six mystical Toa stones. When brought together, the stones form a beacon that summons the champions—the Toa heroes Pohatu, Kopaka, Gali, Tahu, Lewa and Onua.

That's the Bionicle story, and one thing's for certain: It's a line unlike anything LEGO's done before. "This is the first time that we're doing a very intricate storyline behind a product launch," says Michael McNally, LEGO public relations manager. "It's the first time we've done a collectible action hero scenario with a personality assigned to different characters, and a rich storyline. And the way we're putting it out there is definitely not conventional."

LEGO will be promoting the line on several fronts. Six Bionicle-themed trucks will tour the U.S. and Canada, visiting anywhere kids might hang out, from the beach to skate parks. The "Search for the Gold Mask" promotion gets kids to decode clues hidden at Bionicle.com, in LEGO's magazine, or at Bionicle tour sites.

Best of all, as far as collectors are concerned, Bionicle's co-promotion with McDonald's means exclusive villager figures in the Happy Meals and Mighty Kid's Meals.

Some of the figures (the Toa heroes) are already in stores, while the Makuta baddies will follow in late August or early September. TR

ANIME

The License: It's here to stay, folks—just take a gander at Cartoon Network's afternoon lineup if you don't believe us! Anime fans are a wild, rabid bunch—the same type that are already buying Kubricks, by the way—and they'd strip the shelves bare of anime LEGOs.

The LEGOs: When it comes to anime in the U.S., Gundam rules the roost, so we want a Gundam RX-78 right from the get-go. Kaneda (with that awesome motorcycle) from the classic Akira is a must. Throw in Captain Harlock for old-school fans, and you've got yourself a winner!

The Lowdown: "There certainly is a lot you could do with anime properties in LEGO form," Bruns says. "They likely would appeal to an older audience."

Freelance writer Tom Root's pet project, Star Wars Lincoln Logs, is still in development.

VROOM AND BOOM Old and new anime properties do the LEGO thang.

RETURN OF THE LEGO

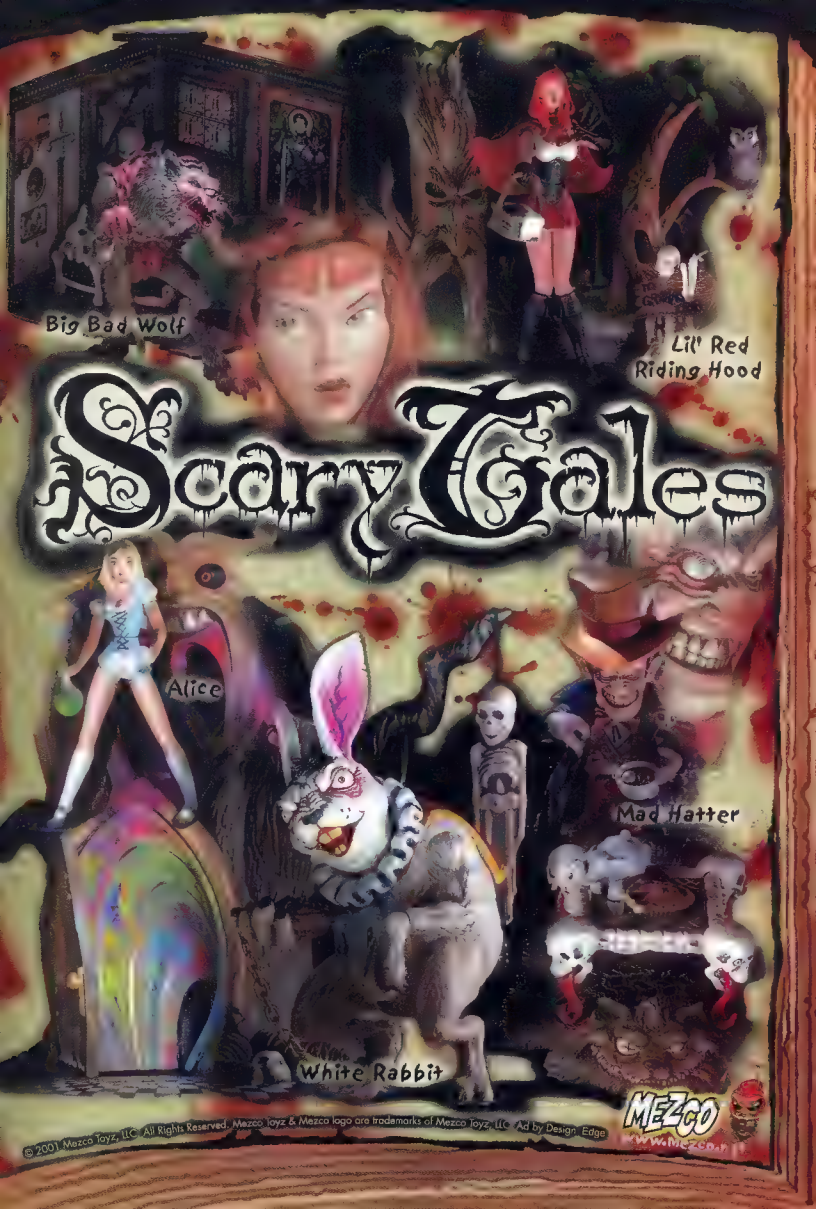

Star Wars LEGOs are great, but we want more!

To begin with, we'd just like to say that the LEGO Star Wars sets are, in a word, fan-frickin'-tastic. The ships are massive and incredibly detailed. The figures are cute and surprisingly attentive to detail. But we think LEGO can do better.

Give us more aliens, dang it! Bite the bullet and make that Cantina playset, with Wuher behind the bar serving blue milk, and a gaggle of freakish monstrosities—freakishly cute monstrosities! Outside, make more of the animals of the SW universe, like the horses you make for your samurai and cowboy sets! Dewbacks, Tauntauns and Wampas, oh my! Heck, make that FAO Schwartz exclusive Death Star Playset—the big one that takes up an entire backyard!

BRICKS TO BOTHANS Greedo, Ree Yees and Ponda Baba ponder what to do with Han's body, while a Dewback-riding Sandtrooper takes notice. And the Cantina Band plays on...

Thunderbirds Are Go!

The U.K. is O.K. with Alan Tracy and the crew

Maybe you remember this British television import from your childhood—a group of uniformed marionettes, heads bobbing madly, in command of a fleet of rockets, planes and cars, all trying to stop the strangely hoodless megalomaniac known as “The Hood”? Well, the show is more popular than ever in Britain, and Thunderbirds merchandise by Vivid Imagination rocked the U.K. last Christmas, which means we’ll be seeing more over here sometime soon. In addition to the cast of 12-inch dolls—Scott, Virgil, Alan, Brains and The Hood (all of whom speak, including stammering scientist Brains)—the famous fleet is captured in miniature, complete with sound chips. The big grab in Britain, however, was the Tracy Island playset, with a disappearing swimming pool over the launch pad and retracting palm trees next to the runway. We’ll say this for the British—they know how to fly. ■ Zach Oat

BIRD IS THE WORD The Hood, Scott, Brains stand tall, while Tracy Island and Thunderbird 2 get small.

Bear Essentials

Medicom gets even cuddlier with BE@RBRICK

GRISLY BEARS Between Basic, Jerry Bean, Pattern, Flag, Horror, SF, Cute, Animal, Artist #1, Artist #2 and the WCC exclusive (right), that's a lot of bear asses.

You thought KUBRICKS were cute? Check out these adorable lil' buggers. BE@RBRICK, the newest creation from Medicom Toy ("Clever Creation Company Since 1996"), will take mass-produced huggability to the next level when they're released this month in Japan. Blind-packaged, like Medicom's Special Force or Takara's G1 Super Collection Figure, you don't know what bear you're buying until you open it up! You could get a skeleton bear, a robot bear—even two "Artist Series" bears. Artist #1, the Bloody Bear, was designed by rock musician Hiroto Kohmoto; Artist #2, Martial Art Bear, is by manga artist Yusaku Hanakuma. But whichever bear you get, they're all pretty dang cool, especially the giveaway versions handed out at this spring's Japanese conventions. An all-white BE@RBRICK was available at the World Character Convention in May, and an all-black bear was at the Super Festival in June.

ZOIDS

trend that just won't die, Tomy re-released its popular Zoids line of toys in 1999 in conjunction with the perfect marketing tool—a Japanese animated series following the adventures of a boy pilot named Ban and his Zoid companion, a sentient animal-based machine equipped with a cockpit for a human pilot.

WHAT'S OUT THERE: The toys are part model kits, part wind-up toys. Assembly is required, and most of the parts come in sheets like Gundam models. The Zoids range in size from the small, unfortunately named Guysack to the Godzilla-inspired Gojulas. Retail price ranges from $7 for the smaller ones to $32 for bigger ones like Gojulas.

WHERE TO START: The Zoids aren't available Stateside, though online retailers like Toys Online Japan (www.amenbo.com/toj.html) carry a good stock at reasonable prices.

UNCANNY SUPER WARRIOR

How uncanny! This guy looks nothing like Magneto, the Master of Magnetism (whose picture is on the card), but he looks a lot like Wolverine—a frightened, vaguely Asian-looking Wolverine with no claws and a rifle, true, but Wexie nonetheless. Perhaps he is a warrior, but there's nothing super about him. ■ ZO

Playmates' Simpsons Line May Be the Smartest Ever

As Homer would say, "Woo-hoo!" Playmates' Simpsons figures are hotter than Chief Wiggum's chili peppers. Most stores have consistently sold out of their entire stock every time a new wave comes out. "If I could, I would re-order every wave. For me, that's unheard of," enthused Rob Mioetta of Midtown Comics, New York City. Fans show up on opening day for new releases. "Half of my orders are pre-orders. It sells better than the stuff from Toy Biz and McFarlane combined!"

Tony Edwards of Golden Apple Comics, Los Angeles, agrees. "Simpsons is the hottest toy we have. Even the playsets have the same pattern." One of the latest sets, the Comic Book Guy's comic shop, sells out the same day it's put on the shelf.

Retailers love Playmates' Lisa-Simpson-smart strategy, a sentiment shared by many of the stores. Bucking toy industry trends, they pack assorted figures in shipments evenly. Another smart move is not flooding the market. "They give fans just enough time [between waves] to save for the next one," says Mioetta. However, there is some disagreement about variations of the same characters. Edwards thinks they have gone to the well one too many times with Bart and Homer. But Mioetta likes that the marquee characters are included in every wave, unlike some toy lines.

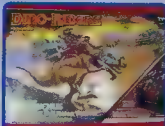

As for the after-market, Anthony Dewariso of Village Comics in N.Y.C. appraises the first wave figures, like Grandpa and Lisa: "Twenty dollars seems to be the highest people are willing to pay for these." Wave 2 through 4 figures sell for $10, but popular ones like Groundskeeper Willy also reach $20. The other retailers agree, even though on eBay some of the older ones go for 50 to 100 percent higher. The Glow in the Dark Radioactive Homer and Pin Pal Mr. Burns ToyFare exclusives sell for a whopping $100 each online, on a par with the Toys "R" Us exclusive Treehouse of Horror set, which sells for $75 at Golden Apple and $100 on eBay.

And remember—this series is only a year old; given time, collectors wanting the entire run will just drive prices higher. So keep your eyes open for the Diamond/Electronics Boutique-exclusive Radioactive Man and Fallout Boy this August and TRU's exclusive Christmas Living Room this winter, or you'll be paying premiums in the future. ■ Karl Cramer

Keep On Trekkin'

Who's the biggest villain in the Star Trek toy universe? Disinterest.

Thanks to Star Trek: Insurrection and Voyager, two less-than-stellar entries in the Star Trek mythos, Trekkers have been faced with an ennui that has all but pushed this A-list property out of the limelight.

Fortunately, Star Trek toys are still in high demand, whether the buyer is trying to complete a collection or simply recapture the glory days of the series. For both reasons, the 1970s Mego series has held its value—Kirk and Spock sell for as much as $35 loose and $75 carded online, while supporting cast members like Scottie and Uhura can reach $60 in package.

The Playmates line, certainly the most prolific, is also one of the most readily available, so figures sell for relatively little. And the sheer number of figures released was slightly daunting for collectors. "When you can't collect them all, it causes [collectors] to get upset, and then they just say 'forget it,'" lamented James Gallo of Toy Heaven in Wynnewood, Penn. Gallo said that he sells most 5-inch figures for no more than $5, unless it's a true rarity, like a Tapestry Picard ($200).

Online, however, there are certain Playmates figures that make big moolah for independent buyers—a Next Generation Dathon figure, believed to be one of only 4,000 packaged with a pog, recently went for almost $400 online. The star ships themselves—the Enterprise, the Borg Cube, the Bird of Prey—are constantly strong sellers, ranging from $50 to $100. And Voyager toys do well because so few of them were made: A rare Lt. Barclay, limited to 3,000, recently sold for $115, and Seven of Nine, the only Star Trek sex symbol, is assimilated quickly by fans in all of her incarnations. ■ KC

EXPERT ANALYSIS

MASTERS OF THE UNIVERSE

BASIC INFO: When muscle-bound Prince Adam held aloft the Sword of Power and spoke the magic words, he transformed into the scantily-clad He-Man, who battled Skeletor and his minions in toys from Mattel that debuted in 1981.

ADVANCED INFO: The MOTU cartoon and toys are legendary and still well-loved today, as evidenced by Mattel's recent re-release of figures in their original packaging as part of a commemorative series. Today, original mint-on-card figures range in value from $20 to $210, but most fall between $30-50.

EXPERT INFO: The series has plenty of paint and packaging variants that are usually harder to find, such as a Man-E-Faces packaged with eight extra weapons. Of the many vehicles and playsets, the priciest is Eternia, three huge towers connected by a monorail that goes for $560 today. The most valuable figure in the line is Tytus, one of the giant-sized figures available only in Italy, who goes for $600. ■ Justin Acili

Top 10 Hottest Action Figures

1. Comic Shop with Comic Book Guy

The Simpsons (Playmates)

Well, it's official. Fattest toy ever. Before you nay-sayers mention the X-Men's Blob, or Austin Powers' Fat Bastard or even I'll Jek Porkins, consider these two small words: prescription pants. That means his pants aren't available over the counter. The man needs a doctor to order his pants for him. While we realize that him delivering his classic line about prescription pants would seem out of place in the comic store, we would have settled for, "Your phony credit card is no good here. Now make like my pants and split." Or at the very least, "Tubby? Oh, yes. Tubby."

2. Groundskeeper Willie

The Simpsons (Playmates)

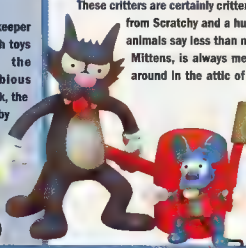

Speaking of fat bastards, Groundskeeper Willie is one of a slew of Scottish toys released lately. Besides the aforementioned Fat Man of Dubious Lineage, voiced by Mike Myers, there's also Shrek, the Scotch-Canadian ogre, who was also voiced by Myers. This figure effectively busts up the Mike Myers Talking Scottish Toy Monopoly, which is probably a violation of anti-trust laws.

3. Itchy & Scratchy

The Simpsons (Playmates)

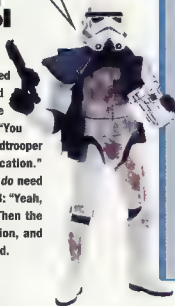

These critters are certainly critters of few words. Aside from a yelp from Scratchy and a hum and a giggle from Itchy, these animals say less than most real animals. Our office cat, Mittens, is always mewing, and the rats that scratch around in the attic of the TOYFARE offices hold hushed conversations between the hours of 6 and 8 p.m....Okay, that's not true. We don't have an office cat named Mittens. But the rats are real. So very real.

4. Sandtrooper Tatooine Patrol

Star Wars: Power of the Jedi (Hasbro)

Y'know, we were watching A New Hope again the other day, and something occurred to us: When Obi-Wan pulled his Jedi mind trick on that sandtrooper, why didn't the other troopers pick up on it? Obi-Wan: "You don't need to see his identification." Sandtrooper #1: "We don't need to see his identification." Sandtrooper #2: "Uh, actually, Bob, we do need to see his identification." Sandtrooper #3: "Yeah, Bob. Have you been drinking again?" Then the Sandtroopers would stage an intervention, and Luke's landspeeder would get impounded.

5. Obi Wan Kenobi (Cold Weather Gear)

Star Wars: Power of the Jedi (Hasbro)

Now that they've hit the big time with Fargo, the Coen brothers should do a remake of the first Star Wars. Wouldn't that be cool? Everybody would be all bundled up, speaking in funny accents...Luke arranges for Han Solo and Chewbacca to kidnap his long-lost sister for financial reasons...Bael Organa goes to make the money drop himself and shoots Han's ear off when he comes to get the cash...Chewie eventually shoots Lela because she keeps whimpering and he can't hear the TV...Uh, on second thought, that would stink on ice.

6. Bowl-A-Rama with Apu

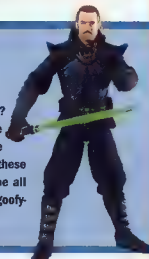

The Simpsons (Playmates)

"If horse-racing is the sport of kings, then surely bowling is...a very good sport...as well..." Even Homer has trouble convincing himself that bowling is anything more than something to pass the time while drinking. We used to have a bowling team at TonFare. The team was called "Corn," and all of the members had correlated names, i.e. "Muffin," "Cob" and "The Kernel." Weird, huh?

7. Qui Gon Jinn (Jedi Training Gear)

Star Wars: Power of the Jedi (Hasbro)

When you buy leather on Coruscant, what animal does it come from? Because even though there are plenty of humans in Star Wars, we have yet to see anything that even remotely looks like a cow. Come to think of it, you'd think we'd share some animals with all of these different planets. But no, every creature in Star Wars has to be all freaky. I bet if Qui-Gon saw a cow, he'd think it was pretty dang goofy-looking. Then he'd light-saber himself up a T-bone.

8. Ralph Wiggum

The Simpsons (Playmates)

Diorama-making champion. Presidential leading man. Paste-eater. This is Ralph Wiggum. This is the boy who took a dozen original, mint-on-card Star Wars action figures and presented them to the school principal as his English project. (The figures were no doubt confiscated by his policeman father during a "routine inspection" of the Comic Book Guy's trunk. The Rebellion surely wept that day.)

9. Lenny

The Simpsons (Playmates)

Man, we can't wait for Carl to get made! Then we'll have the two inseparable buddies of Springfield Power Plant and Secret Stonecutter Society fame! It'll be so cool to have Carl and Lenny hanging out in front of Moe's Tavern on the Main Street Playset! We'll give 'em beers, and we'll...we'll...Oh, yeah. No Main Street Playset. It was canceled, due to a lack of retailer support. Stupid retailers. Why don't you just cancel Christmas?!

HEY!
COOL
ROBOT!

10. Aurra Sing

Star Wars: Power of the Jedi (Hasbro)

Gah! We weren't expecting to see her back here again! What's up with that? People are still going crazy looking for this girl? She had, like, two seconds of screen time! She didn't have any lines! If she appears in the next movie at all, it'll probably be a different actress! What's the big deal?!! Do you hear us, readers? What's the big deal?!! (And the first person who says, "She's a hottie!" gets the big beat-down.)

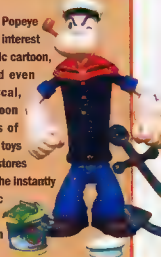

MARKET WATCH

Pray they ain't sold out...

Popeye

MezCo's first wave of Popeye figures is getting mad interest from fans of the classic cartoon, the comic strip and even the live-action musical, thanks to exact cartoon likenesses and tons of cool accessories. The toys were still available in stores as of press time, but the instantly recognizable Classic Popeye figure is hitting up to $16 in online auctions.

Tomb Raider

This kick-ass movie has turned the heat up under its action figure line, driving the regular 6-inch figures up into the $15 price range, and the 12-inchers (including Motorcycle Gear Lara) into the $40 field. Unfortunately, it's led to a downturn in the number of bids for the original Tomb Raider video game toys, which are scarcely moving now that Angelina's got everyone's attention.

GROUNDKEEPER WILLIE

THE SIMPSONS (PLAYMATES)

ORIGIN: Born and raised in Scotland, Willie is famous for his accent, which has produced such mangled lines as: "I tote your dog, that's right, I tote his bones and I tote the mess he left on the carpet." Willie was once engaged to magical British nanny Shary Robbins, but the "biggest Man in Glasgow" got ditched when Shary's eyesight returned.

CURRENTLY APPEARING IN: Willie is still head groundskeeper at Springfield Elementary

THE GUNDAM PVC (VINTAGE VERSION)

IS IT: This guy may look familiar to the recent Transformers PVC figures. Well, Bandai's is in the game, too, made to fit-together PVC figures for Gundam. Under 3 inches tall, they're still difficult to believe.

MUCH DOES HE COST? This guy is available a freebie, given away at E3, the video game industry convention here in Hollywood. Limited to a few hundred, it was handed out to some of the industry.

WILL I AFFORD IT? Well, so far, it has been terribly interested in selling it, as the series this figure is a variant from, only, having only recently been dubbed "Tokyo Toy Show." Your best bet is to buy it as it comes out, or you'll have to pay up once the line starts going.

OF: Of course, by then, prices will be higher than usual. US. $20

YOU'LL NEVER OWN IT

RX-78 GUNDAM PVC (CLEAR VERSION)

WHAT IS IT: This guy may look familiar to fans of the recent Transformers PVCs made by Takara. Well, Bandai's is on the game, too, making these fit-together PVC figures for Gundam. Even under 3 inches tall, they're still detailed beyond belief.

HOW MUCH DOES HE COST? This guy was actually a freebie, given away at E3, the massive video game industry convention held each year in California. Limited to a few hundred, it was handed out to some of the insiders in attendance.

HOW WILL I AFFORD IT? Well, so far no one seems terribly interested in selling it, but then, the series this figure is a variant from isn't out yet, having only recently been debuted at the Tokyo Toy Show. Your best bet is to see how many pop up once the line starts gaining some steam. Of course, by then, prices will be slightly higher than usual. Oh well. ■ ZO

SABE

STAR WARS: POT 4 (HASBRO)

ORIGIN: As a student at Trade Prep, Sabe was constantly getting in trouble for her uncanny impersonations. When her dead-on mimicry of the principal got her expelled, her parents pulled some strings and got her a job as a hand-maiden for Princess Amidala. Sabe's respect for Amidala grew in her service, and she offered her abilities as a decoy to better protect the future Queen's life.

CURRENTLY APPEARING IN: He word yet on whether she'll impersonate the Queen in Episode II.

EMBASSYING SECRET: Lastly, she's been asked to fill in for Queen when Anakin's "in the mood." ■

HELL BOY

BIG BLAST MILLENNIUM (ERAPPHITI DESIGNS)

ORIGIN: Summoned to Earth by Nazi scientists, a young demon fell into the care of an American paranormal researcher, who raised him as his son, calling him Hellboy. (Thanks, Dad.) Hellboy grew up to become the primary field agent for the Bureau of Paranormal Research and Defense, and has fought Lovecraftian creatures around the globe.

CURRENTLY APPEARING IN: His latest comic series, Hellboy: Conqueror Wars, is available in comic stores everywhere.

BUSTS WE WANT TO SEE

Now that mini-busts are getting so popular, everyone from Optimus Prime to the Swamp Thing has been made into one of these classic-looking sculptures. However, there's still a handful of big properties left that we think are totally deserving of the treatment. Here's what we want to see.

G.I. JOE: A REAL AMERICAN HERO

Tell us you wouldn't want a Snake Eyes bust gleaming at you from your desktop. How 'bout Destro, with a nice chrome finish on that shiny head of his? Flint? Lady Jaye? Cobra Commander? We want 'em all.

THUNDERCATS

The coolest thing about these guys was the way the designers blended human and animal characteristics for each character's face. Lion-O and Mumm-Ra would be a given. Panthro and Slythe would be a bonus. Snarf would be...well, unfortunate.

MASTERS OF THE UNIVERSE

He-Man's got the power, and he's got some big shoulders, to boot. We can picture the power sword hung on his back and a base that looks like Castle Grayskull. Plus, busts of Skeletor, Beast Man and the rest of the gang! (We call dibs on the Prince Adam variant.)

GUNDAM

Give us an RX-78-2, with his two beam saber handles stuck in his backpack, and a Zaku, with his spiky shoulder pad, and we'll be happy. Even a mustachioed Turn-A Gundam would be cool. Maybe there could be a little pilot sitting on each bot's shoulder, to show the scale!

PAMELA ANDERSON

Whew! Talk about your prominent busts! We think a bust of Ms. Anderson's proportions would do big business—huge busts! In fact, sales will probably swell to a peak, then slowly level off. A Baywatch version of Pam would (ahem) round out the line nicely. ■ ZO

NATALIE RAITANO

Nikki Franco on V.I.P.

How's it feel to have an action figure of yourself?

It's crazy. I share a house with my dad's best friend's daughter. A plumber saw it and said "Oh my God! They make a Nikki Franco doll!?"

What toys did you play with as a kid?

I was more of an action person. We played Charlie's Angels and I always wanted to be Farrah, because she was the prettiest. But I had brown hair, so I had to be Kate Jackson or Jacqueline Smith.

Could your figure beat up Farrah's?

Mine would take them all on! Have you seen V.I.P.? Nikki's psycho.

Is she in good shape?

She's in better shape than I am. I have to stay in shape for my action figure. That sucks.

If your figure could talk, what would it say?

"Boo-Yah!" 'Cause I'm blowing things up all the time.

You think boys will appreciate a Nikki Franco figure?

They're probably being perverts. I could see college guys having it up in their room. Who knows what they're doing with it?
